

Dr. Doni's Adrenal Recovery and Wellness Package

Who is this package for?

This special 6-month naturopathic treatment package is for patients suffering from one or more symptoms of adrenal distress and cortisol imbalance. This program is designed not only to help you recover from adrenal distress, but to STAY healthier and more resilient in the long term.

What are the adrenal glands?

The adrenal glands are endocrine glands about two inches in length that sit just above the kidneys. These glands produce our main stress hormones, cortisol and adrenaline, along with other hormones. Cortisol and adrenaline play crucial roles in your metabolism, sleep patterns, mood, energy, immunity, and overall wellness. That's because they are your body's main "stress responders" and are triggered whenever you experience any kind of stress, whether physical (illness, infection, injury, allergens, toxins, etc.) or emotional.

What is "adrenal distress"?

Adrenal distress is a condition that arises when your body is exposed to more stress than it can handle and your cortisol and/or adrenaline levels become imbalanced. Trying to handle the stress, your adrenals can get stuck in "stress mode" and produce too much OR too little cortisol and adrenaline, or produce them at the wrong time of day or night. The longer your adrenals stay in "stress mode", the more symptoms you are likely to develop, and the more difficult it can be to recover without guidance from a health professional.

What are the symptoms of adrenal distress?

Adrenal distress is often responsible for a range of negative health symptoms, including:

- Poor sleep; waking unrested
- Exhaustion; needing naps during the day
- Frequent colds and flu
- Memory loss; brain fog
- Painful joints; frequent injuries
- Migraines and headaches
- Dizziness; weakness
- Blood sugar fluctuations
- Mood issues; depression; anxiety
- Allergies; autoimmunity; cancer
- Digestive issues
- Skin issues, such as eczema, psoriasis, hives, etc.
- Menstrual and fertility issues, such as PCOS, PMS, PMDD, peri-menopausal symptoms
- Cervical dysplasia, Lyme, Epstein Barr, and other chronic infections
- Autoimmunity, neurodegeneration, dementia, diabetes, and heart disease
- Unexplained weight loss or gain

When your adrenals are several impaired, you are more likely to experience more than one of these symptoms. Because these symptoms often seem to be unrelated, people may not suspect they are arising from the same root cause.

Is this the same as “adrenal fatigue” or “adrenal burnout”?

Yes and no. These days, “adrenal fatigue” or “adrenal burnout” have become catch-all phrases to describe any kind of adrenal problem. But these terms can be misleading, as they imply your adrenals are under-producing cortisol and/or adrenaline. Adrenal problems can also arise when your body produces too much of these substances. For this reason, Dr. Doni prefers to use the terms “adrenal imbalance” or “adrenal distress”.

Why hasn't my doctor suggested I might have an adrenal problem?

Although scientists have been researching and writing papers on adrenal health for the past century, surprisingly few doctors ever mention “adrenals” to their patients or suggest that their symptoms might be adrenal-related. Instead, they tend to prescribe medications for the various symptoms. While these medications may stop the symptoms temporarily, they don't address the underlying cause and can sometimes increase the severity of the adrenal imbalance.

Those doctors who do check your cortisol levels may only test them in the morning (when we know cortisol levels should vary throughout the day). While this kind of test might help identify the severe conditions such as Addison's disease or Cushing Syndrome (when your adrenals are severely under- or over-producing cortisol), it is insufficient for patients whose adrenals are still functioning but not performing as they should.

What makes Dr. Doni's approach different?

Good adrenal health depends on having a normal “adrenal curve”, where your cortisol levels are highest in the morning when you wake up, and gradually decrease throughout the day until they are lowest at night when you want to go to sleep. To obtain an accurate picture of your adrenal curve, Dr. Doni checks your cortisol four times within a single day (morning, midday, evening, and bedtime). This is done with either a saliva or urine collection, so you don't spend all day at a lab getting your blood drawn.

Dr. Doni also knows that cortisol affects our digestive, immune, endocrine (hormones), and nervous systems. To get a clear picture of what is going on in these systems, Dr. Doni will ask you do a food sensitivities panel (to identify possible digestive issues, such as leaky gut), blood work (to identify blood sugar, hemoglobin, immune system, hormones, thyroid, etc.), and a urine panel to measure your levels of adrenaline and neurotransmitters (to see what is going on in your nervous system).

Once you have a clear picture of what is going on in your body, Dr. Doni will work closely with you to address your adrenal issues through diet, nutrients, herbs, and lifestyle changes, so your body can heal itself – naturally and without medications. Because good adrenal function is so integral to your overall wellness, you will start to feel healthier and more resilient to stress in the future.
